Prince OF Wales ISLAND

Tranquil water reflects our big trees and big sky as an angler works fresh water on the Thorne River. To find this site on the centerfold map, see coordinates K8.

MARIIA TAYLOR

THE BIG ISLAND BIG WATERS, BIG MOUNTAINS, BIG SKIES, BIG ADVENTURE

AND A BIG WELCOME. Use this guide to get acquainted with the people, lifestyles and natural setting of our unique part of Alaska. Then refer to it while you plan your visit and as you travel Prince of Wales Island—often pronounced "P-O-W" for short.

This guide can help you chart your course in a big country—the third-biggest island in the United States, with a couple thousand miles of roads and nearly a thousand miles of North Pacific Ocean shoreline. Discover small, friendly towns where people live close to the land and the sea … where Alaska Native culture presents ancient traditions and carvers welcome your questions as they work on new totem poles … where an alpine hike and a halibut charter are all in a day's play.

Letter/numeral combinations in the text and photo captions (such as K8 on this page) refer you to coordinates on the centerfold map and help you to navigate POW and find extraordinary scenes.

We work together for economic vitality, a healthy quality of life and wise resource development

GETTING HERE

Convenient ferries connect our island to the continental road system

More and more visitors land on Prince of Wales Island with their own vehicles, prepared to stay a while and enjoy our extensive road system and thousand miles of ocean shore. Alaska state ferries link the Lower 48 to Ketchikan and a ferry operation based on Prince of Wales Island provides the sea link to our roads. Walk-on ferry riders can rent vehicles on Prince of Wales Island.

Ferry service to Ketchikan from the Northwest and British Columbia is provided by the Alaska Marine Highway System. The trip from Bellingham, Wash., on Puget Sound is about 38 hours. State ferries also sail to Ketchikan from Prince Rupert, B.C., on a six-hour passage. Another option from the mainland is provided by B.C. Ferries; the provincial system connects to Prince Rupert from ports in Vancouver, B.C., and on Vancouver Island.

From Ketchikan, you're in for a pleasant three-hour sailing on the Inter-Island Ferry Authority. Ships of the IFA provide a daily link between Ketchikan and Hollis—the port on our eastern shore. Passenger facilities include an observation lounge with recliner chairs, a restaurant, a children's play area, a solarium and a reading room. The vehicle deck carries 30 cars. IFA boasts high ratings for on-time performance and passenger service.

Inter-Island Ferry Authority provides scenic mini-cruises to our island.

National carriers link to local flights

Alaska Airlines offers several flights each day year-round to Ketchikan from Seattle-Tacoma. Flight time from Sea-Tac International Airport to Ketchikan is 100 minutes. Delta Airlines flies to Ketchikan from Sea-Tac daily in summer; the two-hour flights run from early June to early September in 2018.

TRANSPORT 56

Island Air Express, Pacific Airways and Taquan Air link Ketchikan to Prince of Wales Island with scheduled service. Harris Air and Alaska Seaplanes connect Prince of Wales Island to Sitka and other cities in the Panhandle. Floatplane charters carry visitors and local folks to remote lakes, lodges and outlying ocean shorelines.

Private pilots use tarmac or water

An airstrip near Klawock is used by local carriers and visitors equipped for IFR transport. The runway is 5,000 feet by 100 feet. The unattended airport has medium-intensity runway lights; pilot control lighting is on CTAF 120.9. Daytime operation is recommended. High terrain exists in all quadrants; wind conditions are irregular. There is no ILS nor CFR.

Floatplane docks are at Craig, Coffman Cove, Hollis, Hydaburg, Kasaan, Klawock, Naukati Bay and Thorne Bay. Most are maintained by the state. Some dock frontage is available in other towns.

ROAD TRIPS & VISITOR TIPS

TAMARA BUOY

Scenic remote roads such as this gravel track near Polk Inlet are accessible to those with appropriate vehicles who plan carefully. Check with the U.S. Forest Service before heading far from main roads. P9

MORE THAN 1,500 MILES OF ROADS TIE TOWNS TO MOUNTAIN BACKCOUNTRY AND SLICES OF THE ISLAND'S SHORELINE

The road map for Prince of Wales Island is a broad system with major paved branches dividing into gravel backcountry tracks. Depending on your vehicle, there's little of this immense island that you can't explore from roadways. More than 105 miles of paved roads girdle the midsection and connect major communities. Good gravel roads stretching about 150 miles touch shorelines and mountains.

Before you drive into remote backcountry, check with U.S. Forest Service rangers in Craig (907-826-3271) and Thorne Bay (907-828-3304).

Many visitors bring their vehicles to Hollis on Inter-Island Ferry Authority vessels. Rental vehicles are also available on the island. The roads are a legacy of the timber industry, which pushed principal roads between towns and remote spurs into the forest. The south end of the system is at Hydaburg. North-end roads extend to Labouchere Bay. You can drive a standard car the entire distance. The Chamber of Commerce in Klawock and U.S.F.S. offices in Craig and Thorne Bay have good maps.

Gear up for safety and comfort

A little planning eases your trip in our mix of mild and wild country. Be sure your spare tire is in good shape. Bring a few basic automotive tools. Watch the gas gauge and mile markers; see the sidebar below for a list of communities where automotive fuel is available. Bring a cell phone car charger.

Adjust speed to road surfaces and weather. Roads north of Whale Pass turnoff and gravel roads are one and a half lanes wide; turnouts are provided.

MILEAGE 31

SCENIC BYWAYS LACE THE ISLAND'S GEOGRAPHY

More than 260 miles of Alaska Scenic Byways connect the communities of the island. The Alaska Department of Transportation cites the system as "unique because it features some of Southeast Alaska's best qualities, such as a temperate rain forest, bountiful wildlife, Native culture and historical artifacts."

Scenic Byways, from the north end: U.S. Forest Service Road 20; Whale Pass Road; Coffman Cove Road; Sandy Beach Road; Thorne Bay Road; Kasaan Highway; Big Salt Lake Road; Klawock-Hollis Highway; Hydaburg Highway; 12 Mile Arm Road; Craig-Klawock Highway; and Port Saint Nicholas Road.

See more at www.dot.state.ak.us/stwdplng/scenic/byways-pow.shtml.

MAPS 28-30

A NOTE ON AUTOMOTIVE FUEL

Retail sales of gasoline are limited around the island, so be sure to plan ahead as you explore. The mileage guide on page 31 (opposite the fold-out map) can help you in plotting your fill-ups.

Fuel is available in Craig, Coffman Cove, Klawock, Naukati Bay, Thorne Bay and Whale Pass.

CLOTHES | CLIMATE | COMMS

Go casual & comfortable

We're in a temperate rain forest and conditions aren't extreme, but pack for conditions that vary from day to day and from shoreline to alpine. Waterproof, breathable shells repel mist and rain and block breezes on the water. Polartec-type fleece is good for outerwear on cool days and makes a warming layer under shells. Light, waterproof hiking boots or trail runners are good on trails and in boats. Local folks favor rubber boots such as Xtratufs. Stores in Craig, Coffman Cove and Thorne Bay stock apparel.

Summer high temperatures range from 49° to 82° F (9 to 28 C), winter lows from 15° to 50° F (-9 to 10 C). Annual precipitation is about 120 inches (305 cm).

Cell links vary by area

AT&T and ACS provide mobile phone service near Craig, Klawock and Hydaburg; service is good in Kasaan. Thorne Bay has ACS service. Verizon is available in some areas. Service is spotty up north. But coverage changes over time: providers may extend service before your visit.

Public Wi-Fi is available

Libraries in Craig, Coffman Cove and Hollis offer computers with free public access to the internet; these libraries also have free Wi-Fi for patrons and visitors using mobile devices.

Papa's Pizza and the Hill Bar in Craig offer Wi-Fi for customers. Wi-Fi is available by credit card at Annie-Betty's Cafe in Craig.

OUTDOOR ADVENTURE

KATHY PEAVEY

Human visitors take to the ocean to observe cetacean visitors—humpback whales and orcas—during spring and summer. These folks are on a chartered excursion to see humpback whales on Bucareli Bay (P5). Several POW operators offer small-boat tours.

Did you ever think you need to get out more? Do it in a place that has so much more out to get. Opportunities to experience the great outdoors are almost unlimited here. You can also explore the human presence, from ancient Native stone carving to remnants of the logging and mining industries.

CABINS PLUS The U.S. Forest Service maintains 18 visitor-use cabins on POW. Several are accessible from the road system (see page 20). Cabins are a great way to camp warm and dry amid remote and beautiful areas such as saltwater inlets and calm lakes. Two Forest Service campgrounds have minimal amenities: Harris River (P8 on the centerfold map) and Eagle's Nest (K8). Memorial Beach (B3) is a scenic gem on the open waters of Sumner Strait, where whales are often seen from shore. The site has picnic areas and a three-sided shelter that's available first-come, first-served. As you camp on POW, remember that camping is allowed anywhere on federal land unless a prohibition is posted. Bring your tent or rent from an outfitter and make home wherever you stop for the night. Use bear country precautions (see page 15).

WILDERNESS Wild land is nearby, all over POW, and true wilderness is just beyond: Karta River Wilderness Area is in the east center of the island and South Prince of Wales Wilderness is on the extreme south end.

KAYAKING & CANOEING The island—itself facing other islands on almost every side—has some of the best-protected coastline in Alaska. Numerous islands and saltwater waterways make paddling a top pick for adventurers. Canoers can paddle on numerous beautiful inland lakes that teem with wildlife. Sarkar Lake Canoe Route (G6 on the centerfold map)and Honker Divide Canoe/Kayak route (I7) are ideal for paddling excursions. Local vendors rent paddlecraft and camping gear.

A.T.V. EXCURSIONS Prince of Wales Island is unique in Southeast Alaska for its extensive system of paved and backcountry roads. Hundreds of miles of logging roads have been converted to trails by the Forest Service and are legal for ATVs (ATVs and side-by-sides are prohibited on state roads). Five ATV maps are available from the Forest Service, the Prince of Wales Chamber of Commerce and local vendors. Spectacular wild country and mountain vistas are accessible on remote roads. Bring your own ATVs or rent a four-wheeler and trailer from a local vendor.

HISTORICAL SITES At Salt Chuck Mine off the Kasaan Road, interpretive signs and mining remnants reflect the heyday of mining on the island (L9). At Kasaan, Totem Trail and the newly restored Whale House are an amazing Alaska Native cultural landmark; at the carving shed next to the trailhead, visitors can see traditional Native carvers in action. (M10)

Berry picking, wildlife and bird viewing, and more … there are so many choices. The Chamber of Commerce staff is always happy to help you plan an itinerary or direct you to a vendor who can help. Forest Service staff in Craig and Thorne Bay can also help you find the right locations for what you want to see and do.

- There's no thrill like a close encounter with humpback whales and orcas (killer whales). The best odds are when you go with a local guide.
- Kayak the shore to see ocean life up close—but stay clear of marine mammals: they're federally protected.
- Scenic Byways aren't just for motorists: Bring your bicycles and get close to the natural world on back roads that trace magnificent mountainous terrain.
- Ride your ATV onto remote logging roads for a unique backcountry excursion. Get official maps at the Craig and Thorne Bay ranger districts and at the Chamber of Commerce in Klawock.
- Go on a salmon or halibut charter for a tug of excitement, followed by some seafood bliss.
- Climb a hillside and pick blueberries, lowbush cranberries and salmonberries. They're Alaskan sun and rain turned into sweet treats by nature.
- Take a totem tour to see Alaska Native art in Hydaburg, Kasaan, Klawock and Craig. Look for an opportunity to talk to an Alaska Native carver at work.
- Check the chamber or City of Klawock for the date of the raising of the Veteran's Memorial totem pole.
- Drive scenic Road 30 north of Thorne Bay on Clarence Strait; picnic at Sandy Beach. Go to friendly Coffman Cove for great photos of peaks and forest. (G8)
- Have a cave day. Walk the Beaver Falls karst landscape interpretive trail in old-growth forest, then follow a guide into El Capitan Cave. Summer only. Call USFS at 907-828-3304 for reservations. (E4)
- Trailer your boat on good road to the north end at Labouchere Bay. Launch at the ramp and motor to Point Baker and Port Protection, two friendly small towns on Sumner Strait. (C2)
- Find remnants of the timber industry's heyday at Coffman Cove, Hollis, Naukati Bay, Thorne Bay and other sites. Ask around about historical places.

Fishing

Some of Alaska's best fishing is on and around POW. The mix of species in salt water and fresh water makes this place the serious angler's gotta-go destination.

Salmon are our most celebrated fish, but anglers' targets range widely, from halibut hundreds of feet down in ocean depths to trout in high-mountain lakes. No matter where you fish, you're wetting your hooks in clean, cold, fish-rich water.

All five species of Pacific Ocean salmon are available during spring and summer. Halibut lurk in cold, deep waters around the island; flatfish at 150 pounds or greater are caught here, but fish in the 20- to 50-pound range are easier to land and make for better eating. Red snapper and several species of cod also await those who fish deep.

JEANNIE McFARLAND

The yelloweye rockfish (commonly called 'red snapper') is a highly prized catch from our deep, cold waters.

Charter skippers can set you up with saltwater day trips. Lodges with fishing guides offer several-day packages. Lodging styles range from world-class plush to down-home rustic. Experienced guides can take you trolling for big king salmon offshore or flyfishing for salmon and trout on clear island streams.

CHARTERS 50

Do-it-yourselfers can reach good fishing on salt water or inland fresh water off the extensive road network. Lakes offer good fishing for cutthroat trout, salmon and Dolly Varden. Some lakes are near roads; others are accessible by floatplane, boat or on foot above ocean estuaries. Dime-bright steelhead run into streams in early spring and fall. Dolly Varden and rainbow trout also make their way into rivers and creeks.

Dungeness crabs are found all over Southeast Alaska. These delicious crustaceans are harvested in crab pots by those with fishing licenses.

Fishing licenses are available from sporting goods stores, fuel sellers, some lodges and online at www.admin.adfg.state.ak.us/license.

LODGES 52-53

TAKE-HOME SEAFOOD

If you're a guest at a full-service lodge, your catch can be cleaned and packaged for you to take home. Do-it-yourselfers fishing independently or with guides can get waxed, insulated fish boxes from local stores or lodges and pack their chilled fish to ship as checked baggage.

JESSICA PRIDDY

King salmon weighing 20 to 60 pounds return to local waters from late spring to mid-summer. Experienced guides put you where the fish are biting and rig the right gear. Rental boats are available for DIY angling.

JIM McFARLAND

Waters offshore of Prince of Wales Island harbor meaty halibut, such as this big flatfish caught by a couple who make an annual summer visit to POW for great fishing.

HOOK, ONLINE AND SINKER

F&G web site has angler info

The Alaska Department of Fish and Game maintains web pages with fishing information particular to Prince of Wales Island. An in-season column provides statistics on fishing and tips for anglers in fresh water and salt water.

Search online for "ADF&G Prince of Wales fishing" and click on tabs that outline fishing opportunities; weekly updates; regulations and management; methods of safe release of rockfish bycatch; and more.

Fishing derby helps hatchery produce fish

Salmon anglers and ticket buyers who never wet a hook can win in the annual Craig-Klawock King Salmon Derby. Ticket sales spin off cash and help to fund Port St. Nicholas Hatchery near Craig.

The derby is split into two contests, May 1-June 30 and July 1-Aug. 15. Monthly prizes range from $2,000 for the biggest fish to $500 for third place. Every ticket is entered into a drawing for a $10,000 prize. The drawing is at the annual dinner in mid-August; winners need not be present. Tickets are $35 each or $100 per family and are good for both derbies. Get them at AC Thompson House; Alaska Gifts; Black Bear Store; Davies-Barry Insurance; J.T. Brown's Store; Log Cabin Sporting Goods; Petro Marine Services; and the Prince of Wales Chamber of Commerce. Some lodges have tickets.

Klawock River Hatchery goes back to 1898, set up as Alaska's second hatchery to augment salmon runs. The hatchery is operated by Southern Southeast Regional Aquaculture Association. Release of juvenile salmon contributes to all common-property fisheries. The hatchery is not open to the public, but fishing in the river is allowed with permits from Klawock Heenya Corp., owner of the land along the river. Contact them at 907-755-2270 to ask about obtaining permits.

Public docks serve visiting mariners

Coffman Cove has public floats. Craig has three harbors with more than 200 slips; vessels to 125 feet can be accommodated. Services include water; power; waste/oil disposal; restrooms; and showers. The office is staffed daily and monitors VHF 16. False Island has a ramp. Hollis has small public floats. Hydaburg has state public floats and moorage. Kasaan has public floats. Klawock harbor has float moorage and a boat grid. Naukati Bay has a public float installed by the state. Point Baker and Port Protection have small state-maintained floats. Thorne Bay's two harbors have transient slips and boat launches. Services include water; power; waste/oil disposal; restrooms; showers; Wi-Fi; and a boat grid. Staff monitor VHF 16. Whale Pass moorage is private.

STEPHANIE JURRIES

Trophy-worthy bucks draw hunters from our Alaskan region and from Outside.

HUNTING

Robust populations of deer and bears provide island-wide opportunities for guided and DIY hunts in many terrains

Prince of Wales Island is a world-class hunting destination, known for trophy Sitka black-tailed deer, large black bears and outstanding waterfowl.

Deer season runs August through December. Residents and nonresidents may take as many as four bucks. Hunters work alpine areas early in the season and hunt the rut during autumn in lower-elevation muskeg meadows and big timber. Several local providers offer guided hunts. U.S. Forest Service rental cabins are used as bases by many hunters. For do-it-yourself hunters, check for local businesses that rent all-terrain vehicles for easier access to remote mountain areas. One outfitter rents camping gear and can be hired to set up your camp at a cabin or on the extensive road system.

See Alaska's hunting regulations at www.wildlife.alaska.gov

DON BUSSE

Alpine heights attract hunters during our summer and fall season for Sitka black-tailed deer. Black bears roam lower elevations.

Black bear season is Sept. 1 to June 30. Drawing permits are required for nonresident hunters who do not use registered guides. Mature boars are pursued in spring as they forage after their winter hibernations. Before June 1, state regulations require that bear meat, hides and skulls be salvaged. Bear hides must be sealed by state-appointed sealers. Call the state Fish & Game office in Craig at 907-826-2561 for contact information on hide sealers.

Waterfowl hunting runs Sept. 16 to Dec. 31. Saltwater marshes and upland fresh water are good bets for ducks and geese.

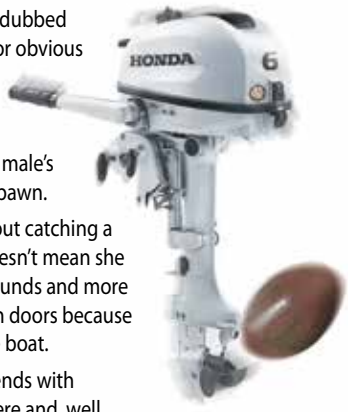
GUIDES 50

CAN WE TALK?

OUR PRIMER HELPS YOU CONNECT WITH THE LOCALS, WHO SPEAK ALASKANESE

A trip to any exotic land goes a little more smoothly when you know a bit about local customs and languages. We offer this quick peek at Alaskaspeak to help you feel at home and to score points when you talk to local folks.

Prince of Wales 101 has to start with salmon. These fish come in five species and each one has at least two common names. The largest of the salmon, called chinook elsewhere, is mostly called king here. The sockeye goes by the nickname red: the color they turn in their spawning phase. The coho also has an alias, silver salmon, and it shines like its moniker. The chum salmon is sometimes dubbed dog salmon, but we mostly call it chum for obvious reasons—but don't be surprised if you hear someone refer to keta salmon—another nickname for a plentiful fish. The pink salmon is nicknamed humpy for the male's humped back when he comes home to spawn.



When we say 'kicker' up here, we probably don't mean what you think we mean.

You might overhear someone talking about catching a "barn door" while bottomfishing. That doesn't mean she hooked into farm ruins. Halibut of 100 pounds and more (about 59 inches long) are likened to barn doors because they're broad, flat and hard to lift into the boat.

The broad topic of fish and fishing contends with weather for conversational primacy up here and, well, spawns a piquant nomenclature. For example: hoochies are colorful, rubbery simulations of squid or octopus attached above salmon-fishing hooks. But take note that hoochies have no link to hooch, the American slang term for home-distilled liquor—although, ironically, "hooch" is of Southeast Alaskan origin: Hoochino is cited by etymologists as a Tlingit Indian village where entrepreneurs brewed spirits and sold it to the U.S. Army after Alaska was purchased from Russia in 1867 and garrisons were posted to the northern part of the Alaska Panhandle.

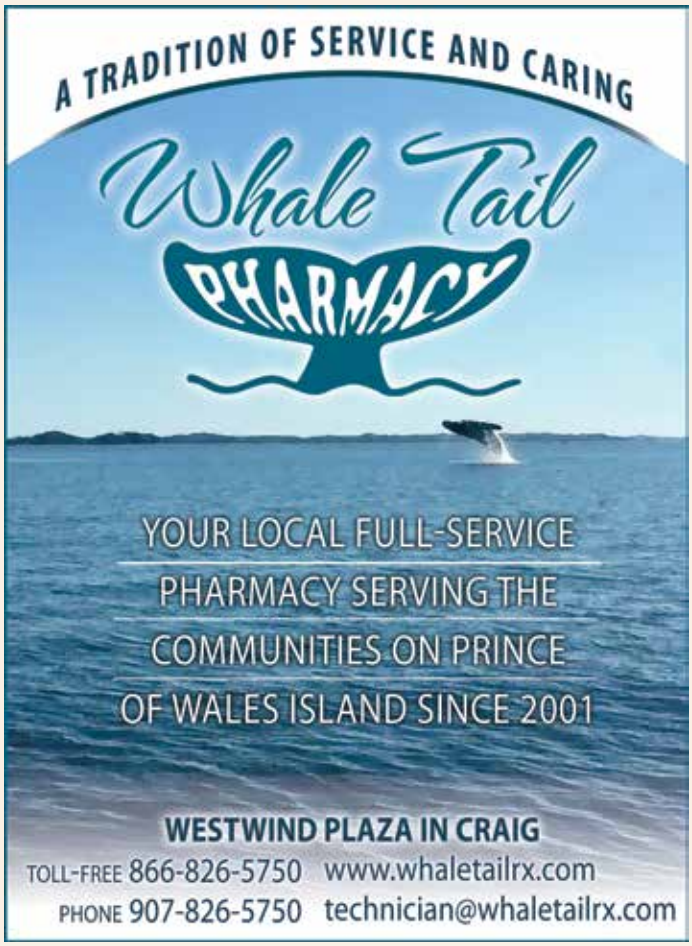
On a nautical point, when someone refers to a kicker, it's not the guy who boots three-pointers: it's a small outboard motor used for trolling. And if you hear mention of a Blue Canoe, it's not a plastic watercraft for the kids: it's our nickname for any blue-painted vessel of the Alaska Marine Highway system.

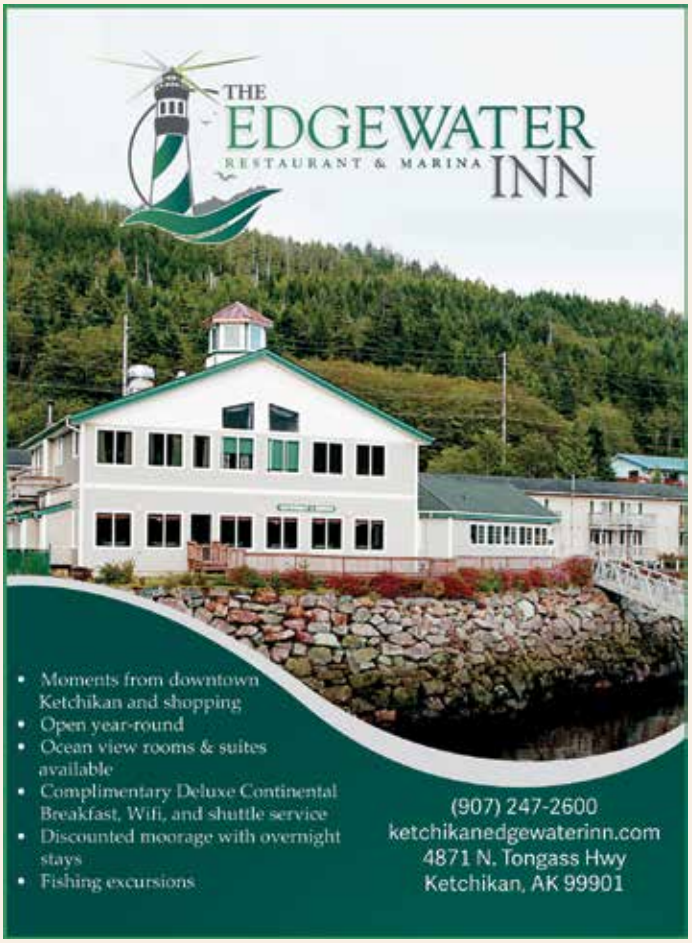
"Outside," of course, is every place that's not Alaska. Inside, on the other hand, doesn't necessarily mean in Alaska or in the house. It more typically refers to protected navigable waters amid islands of the North Pacific—as opposed to waters exposed on the west to open ocean … inside waters, outside waters. The famed Inside Passage of Southeast Alaska runs along the east side of our island.

Now, some place names. For an easier visit, learn these pronunciations of our people and places.

Tlingit Indians ... HLING-git
Haida Indians ... HY-duh
Cape Chacon ... SHA-kun
Cholmondely Sound ... CHOM-lee
Heceta Island ... HEH-kuh-tuh
Kasaan ... kuh-SAN
Kashevarof Island ... kah-SHEH-vuh-roff
Kosciusko Island ... kah-shee-OO-skoh
Labouchere Bay ... LAB-uh-shur (Lab Bay for short)
Naukati Bay ... NAH-kuh-tee
San Juan Batista Island ... Saint John's (for short)

Now you're ready. While visiting, consider a hike up to No Name Lake. (Amazing. We ran out of names.)





Humpback whales are in our waters from late spring until fall. Clarence Strait off our northwest shore is one good venue. F7

A doe and twins browse in early summer foliage at roadside. Drive carefully: children at play.

This rain forest ecosystem and Southeast Alaska's clean, cold sea are prodigiously prolific. Abundant wildlife ranges from tiny voles in the forest and sculpins in tide pools to bears and killer whales atop their respective food chains. Put binoculars and zoom lenses on your packing list. Clear storage space in your video memory.

You'll see numbers of bald eagles each day. Native Sitka black-tailed deer are common along roads and in alpine country. Black bears forage after hibernating and move to salmon streams by midsummer.

WILDLIFE STOPS 31

Boaters and kayakers may see seals and sea lions on rocks and in coves. Sea otters are numerous. Get out on the water and you're likely to see humpback whales and orcas (killer whales) feasting in our food-rich sea. Enjoy all marine mammals from a distance; they're federally protected and we try not to disturb them as they share our near-shore waters.

Sea stars are spectacularly colored but slow-moving denizens of tide pools. Mink, on the other hand, wear subtle fur tones and are quick to hide from view.

BACKCOUNTRY IS BEAR COUNTRY. BEAR-AWARE IS BEAR-SAFE.

Hundreds of black bears live on Prince of Wales Island. Ursus americanus is active through spring, summer and early fall, seen along salmon streams and gorging on berries in forested uplands. Black bears living here are large by North American standards, partly because brown bears don't live on Prince of Wales Island; our black bears don't have to compete with brown bears for food and territory.

Follow these backcountry rules to safely share the island with bears.

- As you hike, make noise to avoid surprising bears.
- Never get between a sow bear and her cubs.
- Keep food in closed containers. Avoid cooking smelly, fatty foods.
- Sleep away from your food, food-preparation equipment and clothing that has food scents.
- Don't crowd bears: give them a wide comfort zone.
- Don't fish where bears are fishing. Watch them briefly from a distance if you like, but fish elsewhere.
- Clean fish in strong currents that disperse the waste.

USFS offers opportunities for close-ups with wild bears

To see black bears in a natural habitat, visit the Dog Salmon Fish Pass wildlife viewing area. This summer gathering place for bears is on Forest Road 21 (Polk Road) about 12 miles from the Hydaburg Highway turnoff (Highway 913). It's about a two-hour drive from Craig.

The wildlife viewing area offers excellent opportunities to watch from a safe, elevated vantage as black bears feed on salmon. Fish gather in the pool below the platform, making easy pickings for hungry bears.

Pointers for safe bear viewing

- Visit when salmon run—late July through August. No fish? No bears.
- Keep very quiet as you approach the platform and as you stand on it—the number one rule. These bears are not habituated to humans.
- Avoid using strong perfumes and colognes.
- Arrive with cameras ready. Unzipping bags can frighten bears away.
- Practice "leave no trace" principles and pack out what you bring in.
- No food or drinks at the platform.
- Wildlife can be dangerous. Bears are wild animals and are unpredictable. Although generally not aggressive, black bears weigh as much as 400 pounds and can run as fast as 30 mph in short bursts. View them from a safe distance.

BIRDS

DIVERSE SPECIES IN FEATHERS FAVOR BIRDWATCHERS IN THE FOREST, WETLAND AND SEA

All sorts of birds are seen on, above and offshore of Prince of Wales Island. Our mix of temperate forest, wetlands and sea life makes the living easy for many species. Bald eagles, great blue herons and ravens are year-round residents. Geese, swans and ducks visit on migratory journeys and some choose to overwinter. Rufous hummingbirds arrive in April from as far away as Mexico to spend the summer. Visiting songbirds grace the forest through spring and summer.

Several species of owls and hawks inhabit the woods. Kingfishers and loons frequent inland lakes and estuaries such as Thorne Bay. Showy cormorants spread wings to dry, commonly on docks and buoys. Visiting plovers and yellowlegs scour soft shorelines for fodder.

Our wilds provide ample food and long days, perfect for feeding and breeding. Study birds' habits and habitats. Know their feeding routines. Move quietly and enjoy the feathered feature. Robert H. Armstrong's Guide to the Birds of Alaska is a good companion for birdwatching.

The rufous hummingbird is a harbinger of spring. The crafty, resident raven is prominent in Alaska Native mythology. Yellowlegs are seen foraging on mud flats. Resident Sandhill cranes nest in muskeg; others migrate north for nesting. Surf scoters feed by diving deep in salt water. Canada geese find plentiful feed and mild winters here. The red-breasted woodpecker is often heard before it's seen. The female merganser wears a distinctive rusty crest. Trumpeter swans favor river mouths and quiet lakes. LEFT TO RIGHT FROM TOP LEFT

TONGASS National Forest

AS YOU EXPLORE THE GREAT OUTDOORS ON PRINCE OF WALES ISLAND, YOU'RE IN TONGASS NATIONAL FOREST, THE LARGEST IN THE UNITED STATES

- Tongass National Forest spans 500 miles from southeast to northwest, encompassing nearly 17 million acres.
- Prince of Wales Island offers 2 million acres of forests, mountains, streams and bays for your adventures.
- Catch a beautiful fish in a stream, thanks to Forest Service efforts to restore and improve fish habitat.
- Purchase wood products from local mills and businesses—products that started with harvests in Forest Service timber sales.
- Find a home within the Tongass at a public-use cabin or a favorite picnic area.
- Help keep recreation alive and well in your national forests by volunteering with the Forest Service. Join POW Friends of Recreation; call 907-826-3271 for more information.
- Get more information about your Tongass National Forest programs from the ranger districts on Prince of Wales Island.

Renovated picnic and day-use areas offer access to forest settings with comfortable and family-friendly opportunities for recreation

Luck Lake Recreation Area is a great picnic stop on an excursion between Thorne Bay and Coffman Cove.

Luck Lake Recreation Area has been enlarged to include a covered pavilion, several picnic areas with fire rings, a vault outhouse and a small boat launch.

Nearby Eagle Creek is fantastic fishing territory and a new gravel trail provides a short, scenic walk to the banks of the creek. The Forest Service and the City of Coffman Cove operate and maintain this recreation site, as well as Seaside Park, which is in the center of town. Coffman Cove is only 5 miles away and it's a great place to get food and supplies for the rest of your Prince of Wales Island adventure.

Sarkar Lake Access on the way to El Capitan Cave and the northern part of the island has been enhanced and boasts a new covered pavilion, fire rings, a rustic small-boat launch and a vault outhouse. Start your lake paddle or skiff ride to Sarkar Lake Cabin and Canoe Route from this easily accessible facility.

Trip idea: Combine a stop en route to Hatchery Creek Trail with a visit to Sweetwater Lake Cabin, Coffman Cove and Luck Lake.

POLK CAMP

Polk Camp Cabin has it all.

Polk Camp is a recently renovated three-bedroom cabin offering unique lodging in the forest.

Once a remote camp for Craig Ranger District, it was transformed into a rustic cabin with a kitchen, running water and wood heat. The cabin is on the road system and can be reached via boat or floatplane.

The cabin sits amid Sitka spruce and hemlock. Bears, migratory birds, wolves and deer visit a nearby estuary. Dog Salmon Creek offers anglers runs of salmon and trout. Crabbing and beachcombing and wildlife viewing are popular in the area. For information and reservations, view Polk Camp at www.recreation.gov.

Trip idea: Combine a stay at Polk Camp with a stop at Dog Salmon Wildlife Viewing Area and an overnighter at 12-Mile Arm Cabin.

ROCK WALK Tour POW caves

For a unique Alaskan experience, tour under the forest. A geologic treasure 400 million years in the making lies beneath your feet. Caves, sinkholes and pits have formed a vast karst landscape—weathered limestone bedrock. El Capitan Cave, the largest of more than 500 caves on the island, offers a trip back in time.

El Capitan Cave

TOUR AN UNDER-WONDER

- Maximum group size is six.
- Minimum age is 7 years; no child carriers
- Reservations are required. Sunday's last tour is at 2:30 p.m. Call Thorne Bay Ranger District at 907-828-3304 for reservations two days or more in advance.

The cave is only about two hours from Craig or Thorne Bay; new pavement reaches within 13 miles of the site's access road. The cave is also accessible by floatplane and by boat: a short walk from El Capitan Passage leads to the cave.

For the free two-hour tour, meet Forest Service guides at the cave interpretive site. After their brief talk about formation and mapping of the cave and scientific discoveries, pick out a helmet, headlamp and flashlight—and climb. The trail zigzags up boardwalk stairways, with rest stops along the way. On the deck at the cave, guides outline safety and everyone turns on headlamps. The first 50 feet of the passage squeezes between boulders and a low ceiling; the cave then opens out. The floor can be slippery; wear sturdy shoes or boots with good traction. The temperature in the cave is in the low 40s. The tour goes about 500 feet into the cave. Guides provide you with information about cave formation, speleothems (cave features), cave biology and fossil finds. Questions are welcome.

Forest cabins and campsites provide for remote getaways

The Forest Service maintains a number of public-use cabins on Prince of Wales Island. Cabins can be rented for up to 14 nights. All the cabins offer special settings. You might drive to a cabin perched on the edge of a saltwater inlet. Another cabin will be accessible by rowboat across a lake (boat and oars provided, but you could bring your own small outboard motor). Alpine cabins are accessible by floatplane. Each cabin offers unique sights: leaping whales or rocky cliffs, giant cedars or a stream overflowing with salmon. See the table below for accessibility. Camping is available for tents and RVs at Eagles Nest and Harris River sites.

Cabins and campgrounds are marked on the centerfold map. Reservations are required for cabins. Browse at www.recreation.gov or call 877-444-6777.

BOB CLAUS

An easy, one-tenth-mile walk on Cavern Lake Trail touches one of the island's remarkable karst features.

Sunnahae Mountain Trail above Craig offers a workout and amazing views of Craig and the ocean from an alpine summit. New staircases and a gravel trail bed on the first half ease the footpath. Work is continuing to improve the trail to the summit. One Duck Trail is a mountain alpine trail off the Hydaburg road. Steep slopes are strenuous but afford access to world-class Sitka black-tailed deer hunting in season. An older three-sided shelter at the top of the trail is available first-come, first-served.

Fishing opportunities abound. Gravelly Creek Day Use Area near Thorne Bay provides excellent fishing for trout and salmon. A pavilion and fire ring offer a warm-up site.

Karta River Wilderness Area offers world-class salmon and steelhead fishing. Three cabins along beautiful Karta River can be reserved at www.recreation.gov. A 5-mile trail linking the cabins provides access to the river. Hunting for deer and black bear can be very productive. Karta River Wilderness Area is accessible by boat from Hollis and by air from Kasaan.

USFS trails trace a wide range of forest terrains

Canoe routes offer pathways to wilder parts. Honker Divide Canoe Route is a challenging 33-mile paddle on rivers and lakes. Sarkar Lakes Canoe Route is an easier 15-mile loop on a scenic chain of small lakes. The hearty can portage a paddle-craft to the mouth of Sarkar Creek, five minutes up the road from Sarkar Lake, and explore parts of beautiful El Capitan Passage. Fishing in Sarkar Creek can be productive; sockeye and coho runs provide subsistence and sport fishing.

Dog Salmon Fish Pass wildlife viewing area is on Forest Road 2100 (Polk Road) about 12 miles from the Hydaburg Highway turnoff (Highway 913) toward Polk Inlet. It's about a two-hour drive from Craig. This wildlife viewing area offers excellent opportunities to watch from an elevated vantage as black bears feed on salmon. Fish congregate in the pool below the platform, making easy pickings for bears. Pack a camera and rain gear and make a trip out to the Fish Pass for a couple of hours of quiet wildlife viewing. Recreation sites are nearby at Polk Camp and 12-Mile Arm Cabin.

Hatchery Creek Trail, just off the pavement via the Coffman Cove road, is a half-mile boardwalk trail winding through open mossy older-growth forest and muskegs. It terminates in a large viewing platform, where visitors can see salmon jumping the falls during runs. Black bears sometimes appear when the area is quiet. Human fisher-folk do well above and below the falls; pay attention to local restrictions and closures posted on the platform.

Logging roads and private land evolve into trails and training

Two new trails opened on Prince of Wales Island in 2017 as Sealaska developed recreational opportunities with a youth training program. Sealaska is the regional Native corporation in Southeast Alaska and the owner of large swaths of timber land.

The name of One Duke Trail winks at the Forest Service's One Duck Trail off of Hydaburg Road. Like its near-namesake, One Duke Trail (M6 on the centerfold map) leads to an alpine area; Big Salt Inlet and areas around Klawock are visible from the summit. Logging road runs about a mile; ATVs are permitted on this stretch. The trail narrows toward the alpine. This portion of the trail is described as "crude"; Sealaska hopes to improve it in upcoming summers. The new Swan Song Trail (L7) is across the highway from the Black Bear Lake gravel pit. It extends about four-tenths of a mile through timber fringe and tidal grass flats. A WWII-era plane that crash-landed decades ago remains on the shore.

Sealaska built the new trails with partners including the BIA; local tribal organizations and communities; the Forest Service and State of Alaska; and Sustainable Southeast Partnership and affiliates. Most crew members for TRAYLS (Training Rural Alaskan Youth Leaders and Students) were Alaska Native youth. TRAYLS trains youth in natural resource stewardship as they earn paychecks, working in the field in areas from botany to watercourse engineering. Sealaska and partners aim to continue the program.

Trail users are urged to be bear-aware. Swan Song Trail leads to a tidal grass flat thick with salmon in season.

Native cultures

FIRST PEOPLES Millennia of presence reflect in community, lifestyle and vital artistry

Imagine Prince of Wales Island as it was centuries ago: a land with a thousand miles of shoreline, where scattered Alaska Native villages settle into the trees behind sloping beaches, wood smoke rising from large communal longhouses, totem poles looking down on proud dugout canoes resting above the tide. Some village residents are weaving tree fibers into baskets and hats and others are busy putting up salmon, berries and other natural foods.

The First Peoples of this region thrived amid bountiful natural resources, the most precious of them the salmon that sustained the Alaska Native way of life. Riches available in minerals, furs and timber would later attract newcomers to the region—but Native ways persisted and now are themselves attracting visitors who want to see a unique culture.

Felled timber becomes legend, mythology and tribal honor at the hands of artists in the carving shed in Hydaburg. The road to this Haida town is a portal into another cultural dimension. R8

Indigenous people on this island and others in the broad Northwest Coast Native culture lead modern lives with cars, trucks, motor-powered skiffs, cell phones and computers. But traditional culture survives in many forms. Customary harvesting continues on the land. Salmon remains an essential food. Traditional arts flourish.

Traditionally treated salmon hang in a smokehouse. Salmon is life for the people on Alaska's coast.

Before written history, Tlingits in a Klawock fish camp processed quantities of salmon. When Westerners arrived, a trading post and salmon saltery were built. Klawock's subsequent salmon cannery was one of the first two in Alaska.

Alaska Natives on the island provide powerful displays of Tlingit, Haida and Tsimshian cultures. Craig Tribal Association, Hydaburg Cooperative Association, Organized Village of Kasaan and Klawock Cooperative Association are the federally recognized tribes of Prince of Wales Island.

Klawock Totem Park displays 21 restored or replicated poles from the village of Tuxekan. Hydaburg and Kasaan also present significant totem pole collections.

All of the island's tribes welcome visitors and residents to enjoy their culture, where one can see young and old singing, dancing and drumming to keep their culture vital.

Klawock will raise a new pole with traditional ceremony and song in the summer of 2018. The Veteran's Memorial pole will stand alone in the town's Stan Snyder Park. Master carver Jon Rowan leads the team of artists. Check with Klawock Cooperative or the chamber for the dates of a two-day celebration.

Arts are integral features of life on the Northwest Coast

Totem poles are the best-known art form of Northwest Coast peoples, but other traditional arts also bear out a rich heritage: carved-wood and fur headpieces for ceremonies; intricate weavings of cedar bark and spruce root in baskets and hats; and button blankets, robes and aprons with totemic designs. Songs in Alaska Native languages and dances also carry the culture. A lucky visitor arrives during a celebration such as a pole raising or potlatch; the display of regalia is stunning.

Archaeologists have dated artifacts found on this island to as much as 10,300 years before the present. Natives' oral literature tells of creation and outlines a civilization in balance with nature in this prolific place.

CYNDI REEVES

Families engage in cultural links that connect generation to generation down the milliennia. This mother and son work on a regalia apron in Klawock.

Tlingit people were first to settle Prince of Wales Island. This wide-ranging Southeast Alaskan tribe was adept at trade with inland Natives and with coastal Haida and Tsimshian peoples. Haidas are thought to have established permanent settlements on Prince of Wales Island in the 1700s; they came from Haida Gwaii in present-day British Columbia. Alaskan Haidas merged five villages at Hydaburg in 1911. Kasaan is the northernmost Haida community and dates from 1902.

Natives of this region lived in family and clan groups and took summer's plenty for winter's provisions. They gathered each winter in village clan houses. Tall totem poles faced the sea and told creation myths, recounted historical events or honored ancestors.

Young carvers continue a world-renowned tradition. When Native artists are at work in carving sheds, visitors are welcome to stop in and discover a rich art form firsthand. Traditionally, poles carved in cedar were commissioned to display success or to celebrate important events. A pole carved in durable cedar might stand a century. Many poles seen today were carved in the 1930s by artists in the Civilian Conservation Corps replicating village poles to preserve a legacy. Contemporary poles are carved on commission and tell new tales. More than 10 poles have been raised in Klawock in a decade. Hydaburg has replicated its entire totem park since 2009. To learn about seeing carvers at work, call ahead.

TYRA HUESTIS

Petroglyphs such as this carved stone near Whale Pass (F6) are inscrutable and enduring markers of an ancient culture. Petroglyphs are prized and federally protected legacies of long-ago first peoples.

AK facts

FIRST PEOPLES LANDED MILLENNIA AGO

The island was first settled by Tlingits—members of the Northwest Coast ethnic group. Haidas followed them. Archaeologists date the human presence to more than 10,300 years ago. Place names in the Tlingit and Haida tongues are prominent in our area.

Russians sailed the waters around the island as early as 1741. Spaniards and Englishmen explored this region in succeeding decades, making charts and naming islands, inlets and waterways. All the while, the island bore the Tlingit name "Taan"—for sea lion.

"Prince of Wales Island" was affixed in 1793 by Capt. George Vancouver, the British captain of HMS Discovery. He named the place in honor of George, Prince of Wales, son and heir of King George III.

Russia claimed Alaska and its vast resources until 1867, when the U.S. planted its flag after a $7 million payment to the tsar. Transient logging and mining camps have come and gone on Prince of Wales Island since the 1800s. Commercial fishing brought permanent settlements. A trading post and salmon saltery were established in 1868 in Klawock, site of a Tlingit summer fish camp. Alaska's first canneries were built in Klawock and Sitka in 1878.

SHORE & TIDES Prince of Wales Island has 990 miles of shoreline; smaller islands nearby have hundreds more. Tides routinely range about 16 feet between highest and lowest; a few days each year, the range is 22 feet. Tidal flows affect boat travel and movements of fish.

TERRAIN & FOREST Most of the island is steep, forested mountains, with peaks at 2,000-3,000 feet. Glacial ice left deep valleys for streams, lakes, saltwater straits and bays. The forest is made up of mostly western hemlock and Sitka spruce (the Alaska state tree), with some western red cedar and yellow cedar. Alder is the primary deciduous species. Shore pines of modest height dot the forest.

CLIMATE The Japanese Current of the North Pacific Ocean moderates our climate and generates 60-200 inches of annual precipitation. Our mean temperature in January is 35° F. (2 C); in July, 58° F (14 C). On the summer solstice in June, daylight extends about 15½ hours; on the winter solstice, about 7 hours.

Use this printed calendar and our online calendar to find opportunities to engage with our one-of-a kind communities. Encounters with Alaska Native cultures are deeply enriching. Culture Camp in Hydaburg is one excellent choice. The people of Klawock will raise the new Veteran's Memorial totem pole in the summer, with attendant song, dance and celebration. See that "special events" listing below and make your plans.

ISLAND ATTRACTIONS

Good places to view wildlife and the wonders of the natural world

6 NUMBERED SITES ARE MARKED ON THE CENTER-FOLD MAP

1 Stretches of Sandy Beach Road (11 miles from Thorne Bay on forest highway 30) overlook Clarence Strait, a feeding area for humpback and killer whales, harbor seals and Steller sea lions. Sitka black-tailed deer are often seen along the road. Trumpeter swans stop at Ratz Harbor estuary in fall. Sandy Beach Picnic Grounds is a good place to see great blue herons, bald eagles and harbor seals, and offers tidepools and sand dollars at low tide. 2 Gravelly Creek has a run of salmon in August and September, attracting black bears; evening is the best time to see them. Sitka black-tailed deer roam here. Watch for bald eagles, red-breasted sapsuckers and summer migratory birds. Gravelly Creek is near milepost 4 on Thorne Bay Road on the way to Klawock. 3 Balls Lake near the center of the island may have waterfowl in the lake. The forest provides cover and food for black-tailed deer and black bears. Bald eagles are seen all year. Balls Lake is near milepost 16 on Thorne Bay Road heading west. A flat 4-mile trail loops the lake. 4 Up to 50 trumpeter swans have been seen at Big Salt Lake between October and January. Migrating swans spend days to a few weeks; some overwinter. Winter storms sometimes drive in bufflehead ducks, Barrow's goldeneyes and others. Big Salt Lake can be seen from mileposts 8 to 11 on Road 929. 5 Hatchery Creek Trail is off of FH 23 on the way to Coffman Cove. Boardwalk trail winds through a muskeg area with interesting flowers and vegetation. The viewing platform at the creek has a great view of the falls and fish weir. Black bears frequent the area when the salmon are running in mid to late summer. 6 Waters near Craig attract marine mammals and sea birds. Sea otters secure themselves in kelp beds and eat shellfish. Humpback whales swim and dive near shore. Harbor seals and sea lions explore coves. Great blue herons fish on shorelines. Cormorants spread wings to dry. Rhinoceros auklets, rare in Southeast Alaska, are seen here, along with other sea birds. Boat tours leave Craig harbor. 7 Salmon run into Cable Creek Fishpass from late July to late August. A viewing platform on the boardwalk is a good viewing site. Black bears gorge on salmon. River otters chase salmon upstream. Cable Creek Fishpass is near milepost 13 on the road to Hydaburg. 8 Waterfowl and mammals visit the Twelve Mile Estuary throughout the year. Look for Sitka black-tailed deer and black bears at the water's edge or near the road. Sandhill cranes come to the area in the spring. Other migratory birds stop here in the spring and fall to rest and feed before continuing their journey. 9 Black bears and bald eagles are drawn to the Dog Salmon Fishpass by pink and chum (commonly called "dog") salmon runs that occur between late July and early September. The fish pass is at the outlet of Dog Salmon Creek on the west shore of Polk Inlet, an ideal spot for salmon spawning. This is one of the most popular bear viewing sites on Prince of Wales, with good chances to spot a bear when the salmon run is high. 10 The estuary at Staney Creek attracts Sitka black-tailed deer, bald eagles, black bears, harbor seals and river otters in summer; wildlife is densest during a salmon run in September. Loons and other waterfowl can be seen. Look for the sign for Staney Creek near milepost 28 on north FH 925. 11 At Sarkar Lakes area, see wildlife from land or boat. In July, Sarkar Rapids bursts with sockeye salmon, attracting black bears and harbor seals. In spring, lakeside plants emerge ahead of other island vegetation, drawing Sitka black-tailed deer and black bears. Bald eagles are seen all year. Paddle Sarkar Lakes Trail: lakes and streams linked by boardwalk portages. Sarkar Rapids are about 5 miles north of Naukati Road junction on north FH 20. 12 Animal sightings are rare at El Capitan Cave, but there is abundant wildlife sign. River otter tracks are sometimes visible. Small organisms live on rocks and in pools. Bears have used the cave for thousands of years. A 370-step staircase leads to the cave entrance and the U.S. Forest Service runs free guided cave tours all summer (see page 18).

SPECIAL EVENTS

HYDABURG CULTURE CAMP July 23-28 The 22nd annual culture camp brings celebrates Haida heritage. Hydaburg Cooperative Association, the tribal authority, sponsors teaching of Haida language and of traditional songs and dances. The arts of carving, weaving and beading are practiced. Participants gather and prepare traditional foods. Canoe races, swimming events and other races follow the camp. www.hydaburgtribe.org

THORNE BAY DAYS Aug. 3-4 Thorne Bay Days commemorates incorporation of the City of Thorne Bay—but it's mostly an excuse for families and friends to party and play.

The tailgate party dubbed the Thorne Bay Pignic is on Friday and is sponsored by City of Thorne Bay Emergency Services. Organizers roast a whole hog and offer an outdoor family social with great picnic-style food at Thorne Bay Cafe, concluding with coffee and dessert at the Church of Thorne Bay. Music is provided by local talents. Tickets usually sell out in advance, so get yours early. Events on Saturday, sponsored by the city and Thorne Bay School, include kayak races in the harbor; newbies are welcome after a primer on safety and paddling. There's a 5K walk and jog on streets and back roads. The duck race is designed for kids, but it's fun for adults—and it can get a little wet. Family games are set up during a fabulous fund-raising lunch put on by one of the Thorne Bay School's programs. www.thornebay-ak.gov

HOLLIS CHILI FEED / ART & FARMER'S MARKET Aug. 11

Hollis' contribution to summer fun features a chili cook-off and feed along with raffle drawings, kids' games and fire truck rides. Judges in the chili and cornbread cook-off confer the coveted Golden Ladle award for the island's tastiest chili. Raffle tickets are sold on the IFA ferry and around the island for drawings that benefit the Hollis Volunteer Fire Department and its program for training young EMTs. Art by POW artists is on sale and Hollis VFD presents what they dub "the island's largest yard sale." Kids Korner offers games for young ones.

BY THE SEA ARTS & SEAFOOD FESTIVAL Aug. 17-18

This festival in Coffman Cove is in its eighth year as a premier Prince of Wales Island attraction. Artwork and artisanship by residents are featured. The edibles are also homegrown—from crab cakes to fried fish, from oysters to truck-farm greens. Vendors from across the island set up booths for browsers and buyers. A colorful center stage offers live music. ccalaska.com/events/arts-festival

Footraces mark 19th year with Olympian motivator

You know it's spring on Prince of Wales Island when migratory birds return to the rain forest and competitive runners take their marks.

The 19th Annual Prince of Wales Island Marathon and Relays and the Seventh Annual Half Marathon leave the scenic starting line in Craig on May 26, 2018. Scores of participants head out after an inspirational pre-race presentation by a former U.S. Olympic team member.

Residents of the island predominate in race rosters, but the longrunning event has drawn runners from all over Alaska and from across the United States. The Boston-certified race layout treats participants to an out-and-back course along the ocean shore; through a swath of Tongass National Forest; past Raven-Mink Alaska Native clan house; near a totem pole carving shed surrounded by ancient poles at rest; across hills; and over streams. Sightings of eagles and other wildlife are routine. Genial race volunteers, many of them in exotic costumes, provide 15 aid stations on the route.

Debbi Sullivan: Champion and Olympian

The race includes a marathon and half-marathon for men and women as well as relays for four-person and eight-person teams.

The guest speaker for the pre-race pasta feed in 2018 is Debbi Sullivan, a onetime runner who switched to competitive race walking after an injury during her collegiate years in Wisconsin. Sullivan excelled at her second footracing discipline: 11 times a national champion and a member of three successive U.S. Olympic teams. She set American and world records at four distances in a quarter-century career.

She's now a well-traveled speaker and author whose message focuses on how nutrition and mind training support athletes' goals. "Food, fitness and thought determine the quality of your life," Sullivan says.

The two-day event features friendly gatherings over food, starting with the pre-race pasta feed in Craig on May 25. On race day, participants, staff and volunteers gather for a finish-line salmon and hamburger feed. Post-race massages are available for the road-weary. The awards ceremony includes a snack buffet. Race weekend ends with an adult gathering at the Hill Bar.

ECONOMY & RESOURCES

RENEWABLE NATURAL RESOURCES AND THE GROWTH OF THE VISITOR SECTOR POWER THE ISLAND'S ECONOMY

Fish, timber, visitors and minerals are fundamental for the economy of Prince of Wales Island. While resource-based components are relatively steady, the visitor industry is taking a greater role.

Access to the island and ease of travel on the island are essential in the growth of the visitor sector. The Inter-Island Ferry Authority's daily sailings between Hollis and Ketchikan provide a link for vehicles and people—more than 44,000 people and 9,800 vehicles in 2016. The island's unique road system, ranging across more than 1,500 miles, interlocks communities and makes a number of natural resource bases accessible—from timber to hiking trails.

Several air carriers using floatplanes provide scheduled and charter service to POW communities. Businesses and residents on the northeast side of POW maintain ties to Wrangell, to the north on another island. Chartered boats and floatplanes link Coffman Cove to Wrangell. Air carriers using wheeled aircraft take off from Klawock Airport's paved runway to regional commercial hubs such as Ketchikan and Sitka.

The service sector flourishes in areas from fishing charters to lodging—as seen in ads and the directory in this book. Retailers ride the growth curve as more and more people come to the island to see a unique Alaskan setting and friendly communities. A survey found that ferry-borne visitors' average stay is 13 days.

The historic mainstays of the economy are commercial fishing and timber. The glory years of timbering ended in 1997, when a world-class pulp mill closed in Ketchikan, but the sawmill at Viking Lumber Co. in Klawock employs dozens directly and contributes to a wide swath of support jobs. Small mills operate in other areas, producing rough-cut lumber and cedar shakes.

Mining faded as an economic force by the mid-1900s, but mineral extraction may be poised for a comeback. Bokan Mountain in a remote southern arm of the island has proven veins of rare earth metals. Nova Scotia-based Ucore is performing pre-mining activities and promoting Bokan as a strong competitor for China's globally preeminent supply. Rare earth elements (REEs) are in technologies from hybrid cars to weapon systems and mobile electronics. Ucore judged Bokan Mountain to be the best prospect in the U.S. for REEs in a 2015 feasibility study.

The Alaska Legislature authorized the state's industrial development agency to issue as much as $270 million in bonds to help develop prospective mines if the minerals prove economically recoverable.

WENDY HAMILTON

That big, wild king salmon, caught by hook on a commercial trolling vessel off of Prince of Wales Island, is representative of Alaska's most famous fish—and a nice payoff for the troller. Alaskan kings command good prices at market.

Silvery salmon were the first shiny coins in the cash economy. Salmon stocks are managed for sustainability by Alaska Fish and Game and scores of commercial fishers live on Prince of Wales Island. Natural fish stocks are augmented by hatcheries, boosting opportunities for commercial and sport harvesters. Klawock River Hatchery has poured salmon into local fisheries since the late 1800s. Operations at this coho-producing facility were assumed in 2016 by Southern Southeast Regional Aquaculture Association (SSRAA), based in Ketchikan. SSRAA also rears salmon at Port St. Nicholas Hatchery near Craig.

Craig is one of the top 100 fishing ports in the nation. NOAA tallied 3.6 million to nearly 5 million pounds of commercial seafood landings annually in this decade; the value spiked at $8.1 million in 2011. Catches and payments to fishers vary, but in some years shellfish species are the most profitable seafood landed in Craig, followed by salmon and groundfish. NOAA reported that 882,000 pounds of shellfish valued at $5 million were landed in Craig in 2010—compared to 1 million pounds worth less than $1 million five years earlier. Fish-processing plants are in Craig, Klawock and Coffman Cove.

Prince of Wales Island oysters are world-class delicacies and commercial farming is a fast-growing economic component. Nearly a dozen producers operate in our cold, nutrient-rich waters—most in Sea Otter Sound. Farms range from mom-and-pop operations with fewer than 100,000 oysters in the water to large commercial growers with more than 1.5 million oysters. The oysters are shipped to wholesalers in Alaska and in the Lower 48. Portions of production also go to high-end restaurants, lodges, cruise ships and oyster connoisseurs as far away as Hawaii. These bivalves are not indigenous to Alaska because our cold water thwarts natural reproduction. Oyster seed, or spat, is produced in hatcheries and sold to oyster farmers who grow out the shellfish in floating arrays, subject to strict regulations and regular safety sampling.

GREGG PARSLEY

Oysters grown in the cold, nutrient-rich waters along Prince of Wales Island are flown fresh around Alaska and to buyers in the Lower 48. This is a clean, renewable and delicious resource.

In the timber industry, events in 2015 brought some some resurgence.The Big Thorne federal timber sale on east Prince of Wales Island, blocked for years by lawsuits, cleared federal court in 2015 and made 6,000 acres of old-growth timber and 2,300 acres of second-growth trees available in USFS sales. Most of the harvest is expected to go through Viking's sawmill—about 150 million board feet.

Congress granted Sealaska Regional Corp. its final allotment of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (ANCSA) in 2015, conferring 68,000 acres that may yield 30 million to 50 million board feet per year while it lasts. This private harvest isn't subject to federal regulations, so it needn't go to sawmills, but harvesting will employ scores of roadbuilders, loggers, mechanics and support people.

The Forest Service manages multiple-use lands from ranger districts in Craig and Thorne Bay. Personnel are under an administrative edict to shift timber harvest to "young-growth projects" in 10-15 years, sending loggers back into areas long ago clear-cut. That change is in contention in the new administration.

The new Prince of Wales Vocational and Technical Education Center in Klawock addresses the need for workforce training in the island's industrial future. The facility aims to prepare people for opportunities in our economy, with impending mining development in focus.

IT'S A SURPRISE ARTY!

One of the most populous communities on Prince of Wales Island is virtual: people hiding and finding painted rocks and Facebooking the phenomenon.

Surprise! A palm-size stone in bright acrylics in a flower box, under stairs or beside a trail. A rock with a bright fish, or hearts, or a bear. Photograph it. Facebook it. Re-hide it to pay the paint fun forward.

CYNDI REEVES

Brushing paint on rocks to brighten someone's day.

POW Rocks took off in late 2016, founded by Craig resident Julie Yates-Fulton as a Facebook group and modeled on a group in Washington state. The group had nearly 700 members in about a year—a new handful each day. The Facebook page describes the program and declares: "Now go outside and spread some joy!" Posts depict rocks found on the island and rocks newly secreted. Enthusiast Cyndi Reeves checks the FB page often: "It's exciting to see new posts every day" from people surprised by colorful stones. She said the mineral amelioration kick is widespread: "Any time you go to an event or a group activity on the island these days, there's a table full of people painting rocks."

The hummingbird is the symbol of the 2018 island marathon and artist JoAnn Johnson is painting rocks for finishers.

The City of Coffman Cove is along the Inside Passage on the east side of Prince of Wales Island. The community began as a logging camp in the 1950s. After the pulp mill in Ketchikan closed in the late 1990s, Coffman Cove reinvented itself. Residents in this community on the shore of a beautiful, protected bay developed commercial and recreational fishing to give them opportunities to stay.

Coffman Cove is an active community with a number of services for visitors. Access is via floatplane, boat or the scenic byway road in the center of the island. At the entrance to Coffman Cove is a big bay that's great for beachcombing at low tide and ideal for spotting whales and other marine life when the tide is in. A covered picnic area and attractive businesses are located on the bay.

Coffman Cove was the site of a large archaeological project excavating a village of the Stikine Tlingit people; the settlement dates to 9,000 B.C. Nearby are many U.S. Forest Service recreational trails that lead to fishing streams and cabins, as well as opportunities for canoeing and boating. In summer, the City of Coffman Cove hosts two fishing derbies and the annual By the Sea Arts & Seafood Festival. See the events calendar in this guide or take your browser to www.ccalaska.com for more information.

Tlingit and Haida peoples traditionally used this area for its rich seafood resources, and still do. Craig is the most populous community on Prince of Wales Island and the leading business center. Icons to the right indicate the broad range of goods, services and opportunities available here.

In the early 1900s, a fish saltery was established on nearby Fish Egg Island and a salmon cannery was built in Craig. Beginning in the 1950s, Craig's major industry was logging, but with changes in demand and less available timber for sale, the town has diversified into many other economic sectors. Craig is the retail, service and transportation hub of the Island. Fishing, fish processing, timber operations, government and commercial services provide employment and goods for the community. Tourism and recreational opportunities also abound in Craig and surrounding areas. Among the recreational facilities are a community swimming pool, a city gym and numerous parks. A number of fishing charters and wildlife-watching options are available.

Trailheads for the popular Graveyard and Sunnahae trails are within Craig city limits.

The City of Edna Bay is on Kosciusko Island off of the northwestern side of Prince of Wales Island. Edna Bay started as a logging camp in the 1940s and remained so until State of Alaska land sales in 1983. Families invested in land and, when logging was no longer a viable occupation, focused on commercial and sport fishing. Edna Bay became a city in 2014. The fertile waters of Sea Otter Sound provide for Alaska's newest second-class city. Sea Otter Sound is also a place for spectacular viewing of marine mammals, whales, sea otters and seals; salmon make their way to the many streams and rivers that empty into the sound from Kosciusko Island.

Edna Bay is accessible by air or water. Airplanes and boats land at the state float three miles by road from the general store and lodging services. An extensive road system, created during the heyday of logging, gives visitors access to vast recreational opportunities. There are many creeks and lakes to fish in, mountains to scale and beautiful places to drive and hike.

Welcome to Hollis, where your Prince of Wales Island journey begins and everybody waves. Hollis is on the east side of Prince of Wales Island, 22 miles east of Craig and 35 miles west of Ketchikan by water. Inter-Island Ferry Authority (IFA) brings island residents and visitors to Hollis from Ketchikan every day. IFA's homeport and our floatplane dock are in Clark Bay on Twelve Mile Arm.

Originally a bustling mining town and later a logging camp, Hollis was settled after 1980 through state land sales. Hollis is now a nonprofit community with an elected community council. Hollis Public Library has internet service and books and movies for visitors to enjoy. The library hosts a summer reading program for all kids. Hollis' small public dock is just down the road from the library.

Hollis Volunteer Fire Department (HVFD) and Emergency Medical Services are equipped with a modern building, a pumper truck and ambulance. Members collaborate with the school for EMT training and conduct a Junior Fire Department program. Every August, HVFD hosts the Chili & Cornbread Feed, Art & Farmers' Market and Fundraiser—a chance to vie for the Golden Ladle honoring the best chili on the island. See page 33 for details on this event and other events on the island during the year.

Hollis School's 25 pre-K through 12th-grade students participate in mastery learning. Two teachers support multi-age groups' academic skill development and exploration through rich reading and writing, projects, art and fieldwork. The school's chickens, geese and ducks, outdoor art and large garden reflect students' learning.

The best place to watch the stars in Hollis is at the overlook and welcome sign. It has a bulletin board that gives important information about what is going on in Hollis. The Harris River picnic area, with a covered shelter, tables and a fireplace, allows you to relax after a walk on the foot trail, a game of horseshoes and fishing in the adjacent river.

Hydaburg, on the southwest coast of Prince of Wales Island, is accessible by floatplane, boat or by driving the Hydaburg Highway. The blacktop road to Hydaburg is off the Hollis Highway and contains turnoffs that lead to Forest Service trails, picnic areas and points of interest.

During the early 1700s, a group of Haida people crossed from Haida Gwaii (formerly called the Queen Charlotte Islands) to Prince of Wales Island. The first migration landed in Kasaan; others later established major settlements at Howkan, Hlinkwaan, K'ay, K'aanii, Sukwaan and Kuy Gandlaas. In 1911, these villages consolidated in Hydaburg.

Hydaburg is the most populous community of Haidas in the U.S. The community is rooted in tribal values and relies on historical and cultural relationships to the land and sea; residents take great pride in their ability to harvest resources in a traditional manner. A totem park was built in Hydaburg during the 1930s. New poles have been raised in the park in recent years due to a growing interest in preserving traditions of the Haida people.

An excellent time to visit is during the annual Hydaburg Culture camp. The community comes together to teach Haida language, song, dance, carving, weaving, beading, and traditional food gathering and preparation. The camp is followed by Haida Festival. These events are usually in the last week of July.

Hydaburg hosts a large number of Haida artists, carvers and weavers. Please feel free to contact the HCA office with questions at 907-285-3665 or dorinda.s@hotmail.com.

One of two Haida villages in Alaska, Kasaan is on the east side of Prince of Wales Island on Kasaan Bay off Clarence Strait. It is accessible via a 17-mile gravel road that begins near the Goose Creek Bridge on Thorne Bay Highway. The road is one of the island's Scenic Byways and offers unique views and a turnout at Tolstoi Bay.

Kasaan gets its name from the Tlingit word "Gasa'aan," meaning "pretty town" or "pretty village." Haida people migrated north from Haida Gwaii (in present-day British Columbia) and established the village now known as "Old Kasaan" seven miles from today's Kasaan. In 1892, the Copper Queen mine camp, sawmill, post office and store were built on Kasaan Bay. Haida people relocated to the new village from Old Kasaan. In 1902, a salmon cannery was built in Kasaan and operated off and on until 1953.

A two-third-mile walk on a forest trail leads to Kasaan Totem Historic District and Chief Son-i-Hat Whale House. The Whale House or Naay I'waans, "The Great House," built around 1880, is the only traditional Haida longhouse standing in the U.S. In the 1930s, totems from the old village were moved to the totem park. Between 1938 and 1940, Civilian Conservation Corps carvers restored the longhouse. Visitors may enjoy the remote setting but should remain mindful of the sacredness of the site. Kavilco Inc. and the Organized Village of Kasaan (OVK) joined to restore Naay I'waans and re-dedicated the site in 2016. Guided tours are available by contacting OVK at 907-542-2230. Kavilco Inc. and OVK have an exclusive agreement for all tours.

The City of Kasaan and the Organized Village of Kasaan offer lodging by reservation; call 907-542-2212. OVK has two 2-bedroom cabins that sleep as many as six; call 907-542-2230. Kasaan sells fuel on a limited basis; call 907-542-2212 for scheduled times. Espresso drinks and food are available at the Totem Trail Cafe. For the safety of our residents, visitors are asked not to shoot firearms within the city limits—a large area around the main town site.

Klawock is on the central western shore of Prince of Wales Island. Because of its location, Klawock is the "Crossroads" of the island. The paved Scenic Byways intersect here, leading south to Craig, east to Hollis and the ferry terminal and north to communities on the northern half of the Island. Many services are available in the community, as indicated by the icons. Klawock can lay claim to a pair of distinctions: the community has the largest employee-owned sawmill and only airport runway on the Island. Klawock also has a deepwater port suitable for loading large ships.

The townsite was a summer fishing camp until Tlingit chief Kloo-wah permanently moved his clan here from a village in Moira Sound. Klawock is known historically as the site of the first salmon cannery in Alaska. Klawock is a significant center of Tlingit culture, with an annual celebration of Elizabeth Peratrovich's pioneering civil rights work on behalf of Alaska Natives.

The totem park has 21 poles that are masterfully carved replicas of the original totem poles that stood in Tuxekan, the original winter village of the Heenya Kwaan people. In recent years, the raising of new totem poles in the traditional manner has prompted grand celebrations. A heritage center with a longhouse and a carving shed are near the edge of town. Visitors are welcome to see the carving activity and visit with the carvers when they are working.

A NOTE ON GROCERIES

Full-service grocery stores operate in Craig, Klawock and Thorne Bay. In other communities that display the grocery icon in this guide, you may find stores stocking limited wares—convenience stores, in effect. You can use the contact phone numbers in this section to call ahead for detailed information.

Naukati Bay on the northwestern shore of Prince of Wales Island began as a logging camp and remains an unincorporated community. Historically, Alaska Natives camped here and called the bay Naukatee. It is the gateway to Sea Otter Sound, which is rich in marine life and wildlife.

Several attractions draw people to the community and services available here are indicated by the icons to the right.

A floating dock and boat launch are near the Naukati Bay Shellfish Nursery, where oyster spat (seeds) are grown and provided to a number of oyster farms in the area. Naukati Bay is the hub of the fast-growing oyster production industry on Prince of Wales Island. Commercial operations around Sea Otter Sound range from small farms, with about 100,000 oysters in floating arrays, to large facilities that keep as many as 1.5 million oysters feeding on the sound's rich nutrients. Oysters from this area are sold to Alaskan retailers, the cruise industry, lodges and restaurants and shellfish connoisseurs as far away as Hawaii.

A covered picnic area is open to the public and is a favorite gathering place for community activities. Naukati Bay's Fourth of July celebration includes an axe throwing contest, a skunk cabbage contest and games for children, closing with a brilliant display of fireworks.

The community is on the way to many of the Forest Service's well-maintained trails; numerous creeks and lakes are also nearby off the Scenic Byway. Accessible from the Naukati Bay area are Sarkar Lake Canoe Loop; Beaver Falls Boardwalk Trail; El Capitan Cave; and Cavern Lake trail. RV parking is available, but not other RV services.

Point Baker is on the northern tip of Prince of Wales Island in a protected harbor that opens onto Sumner Strait. The community is accessible only by boat or floatplane. Since being settled in the early 1900s, the community has prospered through the fishing industry.

The first store and post office were opened by 1941. Today a 440-foot state float is the "floating downtown" and includes a floatplane dock; store; cafe; saloon; fuel sales; laundry and shower; community building; post office; and volunteer fire department.

Point Baker is currently 25 households strong; residents are commercial gillnet and troll fishermen. In summer, the harbor has full-service and do-it-yourself lodges and hosts traveling cruisers from all over the U.S., drawn by great fishing for Alaskan salmon and halibut and for opportunities to observe humpback whales.

A blog posted by a resident of the island provides fascinating perspectives on this area in words and photos; take your browser to www.alaskafloatsmyboat.com.

Port Protection is nestled in a quiet cove three miles south of the northern tip of the west side of Prince of Wales Island. Access is by boat or floatplane. A gravel boat launch at Labouchere Bay, a little more than a mile from the community, provides access to the road system.

In the early 1900s, Wooden Wheel Johnson gave the cove its name. A trading post established in 1946 ran for a quarter of a century, growing into a warehouse, rental cabins, dock facilities and fuel sales. The permanent community of Port Protection was established in 1981 through the state's land disposal program.

Commercial fishing is the principal industry; gillnetters and trollers homeport here. Local artists produce drawings, paintings, carvings of wooden boxes and writing. Full-service and self-service lodging is available nearby. A boardwalk in the forest provides charming access to residents' homes. Most services are seasonal in Port Protection. Call Wooden Wheel Cove Trading Post for updated information: 907-489-2222.

Thorne Bay is on the eastern shore of Prince of Wales Island. It rests on gentle hills overlooking its namesake bay, where Alaska Natives hunted and fished for centuries.

Ketchikan Pulp Co. brought their floating logging camp to shore here from Hollis in 1961, when timber was still the leading sector of the island's economy. The "new economy" boasts a number of visitor services, as indicated by the icons shown here. K through 12 schools provide education while a U.S. Forest Service ranger district office and the field office for Southeast Road Builders provide employment for families in the area. Thorne Bay is linked to the rest of the Island by the state Scenic Byways. Thorne Bay can also be accessed via several floatplane services and private boats.

Visitors entering on the main road find a unique welcome sign plaza housed in "The Claw"—the world's largest log-handling grapple. Thorne Bay was home for the world's largest logging camps in the 1960s. In 1982, a State of Alaska land sale program gave residents the opportunity to incorporate their city. Fishing, beachcombing, clamming and hiking are close by in the bay and up the Thorne River. Thorne Bay is also the access point for the popular USFS-maintained Eagles Nest Campground as well as the Balls Lake and Sandy Beach picnic areas. An archeologically significant 5,360-year-old spruce root basket—"The Thorne River Basket"—was found in the estuary of the Thorne River in 1998 and is preserved in the Alaska State Museum in Juneau.

Whale Pass is on the northeast side of Prince of Wales Island, north of Coffman Cove. The town sits on a bay in Whale Passage, named by a Navy commander in the 1880s. Orcas and humpback whales are commonly seen in the pass, a nearly 10-mile-long strait between Thorne Island and Prince of Wales Island. The area has been the site of logging camps since 1964. In the early 1980s, the last camp moved out and the area was permanently settled through land disposal sales. The road system reached town in the early 1980s.

Recreational options are numerous. Neck Lake offers beautiful vistas. The shore road is a scenic wonder. Cavern Lake near town drains into a cave and reappears hundreds of feet away in stairstep waterfalls. Twin Island Lake provides a handsome mountain setting and good trout fishing. Exchange Cove offers beach camping. Beaver Falls Karst Trail is handicap-accessible and offers a wonderful overview of karst systems. The U.S. Forest Service provides summertime tours of nearby El Capitan Cave for the more adventurous visitors.

Ancient Alaska Native fish traps and petroglyphs are seen at nearby salmon streams. Coho salmon fishing is enhanced by hatchery stocks released at Neck Lake, which drains in a series of dramatic falls. Visitor services include overnight lodging with meals; cabin rentals; a laundromat; guided stream fishing; and fishing and glacier charters on the scenic Inside Passage. A grocery store offers basic foodstuffs and fishing tackle, as well as products made by local artisans. Take-out food is available during the summer. A gas station opens on limited hours (diesel is not available). A vendor sells fishing and hunting licenses. Construction and contracting services are available in Whale Pass.

A postal drop offers twice-weekly service for outgoing and incoming mail. Whale Pass Bible Church holds regular services at 11 a.m. Sundays. Whale Pass Community Association operates a state-owned seaplane base, a dock, boat slips and a launch ramp. Medical/EMS and fire department services are available.

A NOTE ON DINING

Conventional dining-out options are available in Craig, Klawock and Kasaan. In other communities, options might be limited to take-out. We advise calling ahead before you travel to less-populous towns or checking with local folks. Taking some food supplies with you is usually a good move.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

Place names watermark the land after waves of settlement

Prince of Wales Island is the largest of about 1,100 islands in the Alexander Archipelago of Alaska's Panhandle and took on its English name before 1800. But the island's original name, Taan, was Tlingit. Our names for islands and bays, in fact, span millennia and many waves of explorers and settlers.

Tlingits' ancestors arrived 10,000 years ago, Haida peoples several centuries ago. We hear echoes in place names such as Kasaan, Klawock and Sukkwan Island. Spanish explorers in the 1770s put names on charts as they went—giving us Suemez Island, El Capitan and the Gulf of Esquibel. British Capt. George Vancouver visited in 1793 and named this island for George, Prince of Wales, the heir of King George III. Russians explored and exploited this area in the late 1700s; they left the names for Kosciusko, Baranof and Chichagof islands—and applied Tsar Alexander's name to the entire island chain.

Visitors and residents interested in the ways that place names express culture and history have two good sources for study. University of Washington Press and Sealaska Heritage Institute recently completed a 20-year project and published the book Haa Leelk'w Has Aani Saax'u—Our Grandparents' Names on the Land. The volume touches on 3,000 Alaska Native place names in Southeast Alaska.

The massive Dictionary of Alaska Place Names (1,100 pages) compiled by the USGS in 1967 is available online free in Kindle, PDF and ePub formats. Go to archive.org and search for "dictionary of Alaska place names."

For more general views of the fascinating back story of this region, consult two books by historian Patricia Roppel: Southeast, Alaska's Panhandle and Southeast: A Pictorial History.

Prince of Wales Chamber of Commerce

Our motto is Progress Through Unity and that principle keeps us focused on the economic, cultural and educational features that we all share. Although our island is a unique melting pot of indigenous peoples, loggers, kayakers, pilots, fishermen, artists, lodge owners, builders, forest rangers and a hundred other types, we agree on a few key things. They're in our mission statement.

The Prince of Wales Chamber of Commerce works to promote commerce on the island by advocating for economic vitality, a healthy quality of life and wise resource development that benefits all residents and communities.

Beyond networking and providing information through our office, the chamber participates in many events to promote commerce and enhance quality of life. Our major outreach to communities and to the world at large is this annual island guide. The publication, in printed and online forms, is aimed primarily at visitors and residents, but it appeals to investors, re-locators and second-homers as well.

The chamber's Adopt-A-Marathon Mile cleanup in May goes along with co-sponsorship of the Prince of Wales Marathon. We also support youth by funding annual scholarships for high school graduates.

The chamber is a nonprofit 501(c) 6 organization governed by a nine-person board of directors. Our goal is to have members representing as many communities island-wide as we can. The chamber of commerce is funded by advertising in the guide and by members' dues. Annual scholarships are funded by the generous underwriting of members and other benefactors.
